You can Trust Me

My Child,

I AM the promise keeper. I know that others have made promises to you that never came through. I know you are battling with trust issues that stem from rejection, abandonment, and pieces of lingering hurt, but I am not here to add to that. I want to be your safe space; the One you run to for everything. Long before you were born I took an oath so that you could be sure that I wouldn't let you down. I'm aware that you've had to put walls up throughout the years, but let's partner to reconstruct them. Let's build a bridge of love, trust, hope and faith and I'll be your foundation. You are my inheritance, my prized possession, the only thing that I created whom I call 'very good'. As you read this, you are in the center of my love and purpose. It may not feel like it right now, but later on you will see that I am truly good and that you can trust me completely. Will you take the step to trust fall into My hands? I promise to always hold you up.

Your Refuge,

Jesus Christ

SELF-REFLECTION:

Trust Falling Into God's Hands

Trusting God is an everyday activity that isn't automatic. God knows that you have been hurt, but He desires to show you that you can trust in Him.

Instructions: Answer the following questions as honestly as if God was asking them. These questions are meant to help you understand where you are when it comes to trusting God.

1. What does trust mean to you? Does it align with God's idea of trust?

2. Do you consider yourself trustworthy? Why/Why not?

3. Where did your trust issues start?

SELF-REFLECTION:

Trust Falling Into God's Hands

Areas I trust God (I have completely surrendered these areas)	Areas I have not yet surrendered to God (These are the areas where I have control)
